James Tipton, well-known young attorney, was killed, and ten other persons injured in auto mishaps during Sunday, while every agency of the police department conducted its relentless war upon reckless driving and speeding of motorists.

Tipton met his death in an auto crash near Grantville, according to a telegram received by The Constitution, which stated that Miss Evelyn Brazell, of 101 Peachtree place, and H. C. Hood, who were in the car with him, were injured—the young woman seriously.

Others hurt during the day were T. R. Johnson, 331 Peoples street; Mrs. W. C. English, 383 Gordon street; W. J. Griffin, 283 1/2 Central avenue; W. G. Bassett, 252 1/2 Washington street; W. J. Potter, 20, 85 Woodson street; Darrah E. Lee, 19, 42 East Harris street; D. A. Stoddard, 248 State street, and Charlie Holt, 24 York avenue.

ARREST DECLARED NEAR IN M'KEE DEATH CASE

Meanwhile detectives were still engaged in a search for the driver of the machine which ran down and killed Hugh L. McKee, former Atlanta postmaster, at Brookwood station Friday night.

It is claimed that they are drawing the net tighter every day and that an arrest is expected either today or tomorrow.

Atlanta Mothers
Will Be Guests
Of Constitution

Elaborate Program To Be Presented at Howard Theater.

Hundreds of Atlanta mothers, 40 or older, will enjoy a special program at the Howard theater at noon, today as guests of The Constitution. The mother sentiment will feature the entertainment and all indications point to a capacity house.

One of the most remarkable of recent pictures, Paramount's "Breaking Point," and special musical novelties and prologues, arranged by Buel B. Risinger, conductor of the Howard Symphony orchestra, make up the brilliant program.

The orchestra will begin with the feature, entitled "East, West, North and South." Mrs. Alex Keese, soprano, will sing a number of selected songs, including the immortal "Mother of Mine" of Kipling. She will be accompanied by the orchestra in the first song and in the others by piano and violin obligatos, played by Annie Mae Norton and Alex Keese. Vincent Lopez's orchestra will render "Popular Hits of Yesterday."

A comedy film, "Commencement Day," and two other special films, "Howard Animated Close-Ups," and the screen version of "Mother of Mine," have been especially selected for the occasion.

Each mother as she enters the door will be presented with a white flower from a big supply which will be placed in the lobby before the doors are open.

The Constitution has made arrangements with the Black and White Cab company, whereby a large fleet of their comfortable cabs will go out to the Old Ladies' home in West End and bring them in to enjoy the party. The same cabs will take them home again.

SPEAKS TO BAPTISTS

SENATOR WALTER F. GEORGE.

BAPTIST LAYMEN
HOLD BIG MEETING
ON TUESDAY NIGHT

Thousands Will Gather at Auditorium on Eve of Opening of Southern Baptist Convention.

BY LOUIE D. NEWTON.
A mass meeting for men and women of Atlanta who are interested in the vital questions of everyday living in the light of Christianity will be held in the city auditorium Tuesday night beginning at 7:30 o'clock with an organ concert by Charles A. Sheldon, Jr.

The meeting has been arranged by the Atlanta Baptist council as the forerunner of the Southern Baptist convention which will begin its sessions in the auditorium at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. The majority of the delegates and visitors to the convention will be in the city by Tuesday night and it is believed that there will be an immense attendance at this gathering.

Senator George to Speak.
The first speaker on the program will be Senator Walter F. George, junior, United States senator from Georgia. Senator George is well known in Atlanta because of his residence here for some years while he was a member of the supreme court. He held a number of important public offices in Georgia before going to Washington. He is a native of Vienna and is widely connected in civic and church circles in the state. His address will deal directly with the great question of the stewardship of life.

Governor Clifford Walker will introduce Senator George. Governor Walker is an active churchman and is very much interested in the meeting called here at this time. In his address he will deal with the great question of the stewardship of life.

Martin and Harvey, Snowblind and Trail-Weakened
Fought Grim Battle for Life in Desolate Wastes

(Copyright, 1924, U. S. and Great Britain, South America by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

BY F. U. RUDOLPH AMUNDSEN.
Port Moller, Alaska, May 11.—(By wireless via Cordova to Bremerton, Wash.)—Major Frederick Martin and Sergeant Alva L. Harvey arrived at 6 o'clock last night at Port Moller, one of the Pacific American fisheries stations and cannery. Both were in good physical condition despite their hazardous trip, which Major Martin himself described to me as follows:

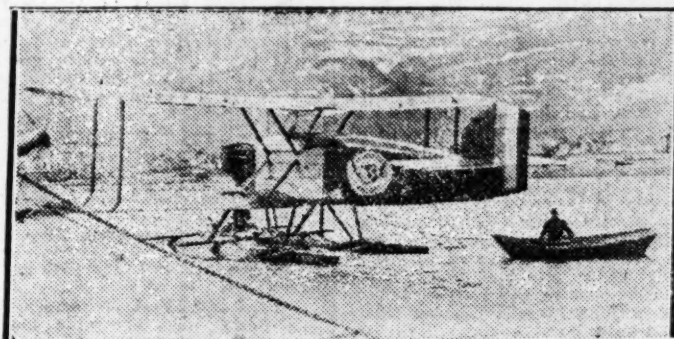

"We left Chignik at 11 o'clock on the morning of April 30, intending to make the portage back of Chignik. We had been flying only a little over an hour when we encountered a heavy fog. At 12:30 o'clock we crashed full against the side of a mountain.

"The ship was a total wreck but neither Harvey nor myself was hurt. Fog was impenetrable. "The fog covered everything and it was impossible to see. We attempted to reach the Pacific shore line by guiding ourselves with a compass but the snow and fog were so blinding it was impossible to keep our direction.

"We would walk a few feet and back with the compass only to discover we had in that short distance moved in the wrong direction. "Finally we retraced our steps in the snow to the ship and made ourselves as comfortable as the zero weather would permit under the wings of the fuselage. We slept in the fuselage in our fur-lined flying shirts, using part of the ship for fuel.

"We remained there next day on account of the fog. Then on the morning of May 3 we tried to reach the Pacific coast again, but the fog still blinding us. Finally we reached a small stream, running northwest. We followed this all day, as we could not have seen where we were going otherwise.

"That night we slept in an alder

Last photograph of the Flagplane Seattle flown by Major Martin and Sergeant Harvey. It was in the fuselage of this ship that the two round-the-world flyers slept in fur-lined flying garments after it crashed against an Alaskan mountain. It was the wooden fragments of the ruined "bird" that furnished fuel during the first two days of desperate adventure.

The photograph was taken at Kanatuk, Portage Bay, Alaska, where the flyers went into a forced landing. Major Martin is in the small boat.

thicket. We spread alder branches on the snow and lay down in our ordinary clothing, without the fur flying suits. "We were afraid to continue toward the north shore because we had no information about the inhabitants so we returned next day to the ship. We remained there the night of May 3. Next day we tried again for the Pacific coast, leaving at 5 o'clock in the morning.

"The atmosphere cleared and everything was visible except for the mountain tops. But we couldn't locate any passage to the Pacific and headed towards a lake in the distance, in the southwest. We camped again in an alder thicket, three miles from the lake which we reached at the noon of May 5. The going was slow because of our weakness and struggles with the snow.

"Cover 5-Miles in Day. "We found no people at the lake as we had hoped, and so continued, a gentle north wind, but it was very chilly and made the night almost impossible to bear.

"We left camp at four in the morning, going on down stream and at 8 o'clock arrived at a trapper's cabin. The head of Moller bay was only three miles away but travel was possible only on the rocks on the edge of the stream. We were constantly breaking through the ice and the snow crust was too weak to bear us.

"The cabin was deserted, but we found a scant supply of food. There was some flour and pickles and salmon berries. I made hot cakes for the first time in my life, but they sure tasted good.

Mix Food and Sleep. "We were so weak we could hardly stand. All the previous seven days we had been existing only on liquid condensed food we carried with us. After two hot cakes, we feel asleep, without blankets, awakened and had more hot cakes, five this time. We slept again, and had creamed salmon and hot cakes for breakfast. We were very weak.

"At noon next day, a brace of Mallards lighted on the bay in front of the cabin and we killed them with the trapper's rifle. Roast duck and hot cakes for dinner, and man! but they were good.

Had "Southern" Breakfast. "Harvey went out on reconnaissance and killed two Alaskan rabbits. We had too much food. After a southern breakfast of fried rabbit, hot cakes and gravy we put the cabin in order and left for Port Moller.

"We followed the beach for 20 miles, arriving at the Pacific American cannery at Port Moller at 6 o'clock. It was our first sight of humanity since the crash.

"What a grand and glorious feeling, safe at last. We were carried across the bay by a Jacob native to the cannery and the authorities were most hospitable and solicitous of our welfare. There was plenty of delicious food and rest where the fires did not melt down into the snow. And not the least of their generosity is a bath and a shave."

"SEATTLE" SMASHED ON MOUNTAIN
AS FLIERS BATTLED HEAVY FOG

Accident Occurred Within Half Hour After Flagship Hopped Off From Chignik—Food In Trapper's Cabin Helped Lost Birdmen In Adventure.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Cordova, Alaska, May 11.—Major Frederick L. Martin and his mechanic, Staff Sergeant Alva L. Harvey, who have been missing since April 30, when they left Chignik in their round-the-world flight, are safe at Port Moller, Alaska. A radio message was received here from Major Martin this morning.

The plane struck a mountain near Port Moller an hour and a half after leaving Chignik, according to Major Martin's message. Although the ship was wrecked, neither of the aviators was hurt, he said.

Port Moller is 199 miles west of Chignik. The aviators owed their existence, the radiogram said, to "concentrated food and nerve." Exhausted, the flight commander and his mechanic finally reached a trapper's cabin at the southernmost point of Port Moller bay, on the morning of May 7. There they found food and regained sufficient strength to walk the beach three days before they were rescued.

The message from Major Martin which reached here at 1:15 o'clock this morning came from Port Moller via St. Paul Island.

Nothing in the message indicates, as it was understood here, how many miles Major Martin was from Port Moller bay when his machine, the flag plane Seattle, was wrecked against a mountain. Thus it was not known here today how many miles he and Sergeant Harvey forced their way through the wilderness before they reached the trapper's cabin and found something more to eat than the concentrated rations they carried. It is known, however, that they were at least a week on their journey.

Is Land of Famine.

South of Port Moller bay, the peninsula is only 25 miles across to the Pacific ocean, the bay being a branch of Bering Sea on the north side of the peninsula. The country is still under snow and no food is to be found.

To the tale of Major Martin's fate, a vivid feature is contributed. In the minds of those who have been studying the episode here in the fact that two men at Port Moller thought last Sunday that they saw a plane 10 or 15 miles from Port Moller, notwithstanding that the point at which Major Martin hit the mountain the previous Wednesday was at least 30 miles from Port Moller.

Major Martin's plane was last seen by an authentic observer when a trapper on Lake Chignik saw him flying about 400 feet above the frozen waters about a half hour after he had left Chignik.

Started in Storm. The air fleet commander left Chignik in so great a storm that the other members of the expedition, then waiting for him at Dutch Harbor and Lieutenant Clayton L. Bissell, who made all arrangements for the flight from Seattle to Attu Island at the western end of the Aleutian chain, had considered it certain that the commanding officer would not fly that day. Although the day had dawned fair and clear at Dutch Harbor, northwest gales soon started, and violent winds carrying much snow arose

FARM BLOC PUTS
NEW FUEL ON ROW

Forced Consideration by Congress of McNary-
Haugen Bill Widens
Breath at Capital.

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.

Washington, May 11.—Farm leaders in congress, winning the first point in their campaign for agricultural relief legislation, have forced a fight in congress which will be stormy and which, if successful, may further widen the breach between the capitol and the white house.

By holding up the tax bill until they won their way, they have compelled administration leaders to take action on the McNary-Haugen bill, providing an export corporation for surplus farm products. They go into the fight with the opposition of President Coolidge, who does not like the measure though it was framed by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace.

Will Push It Through.

The bill will be taken up by the house at the end of this week or the first of next, under an agreement forced from republican leaders there by farm bloc members. No definite decision has been reached among senate farm bloc members as to whether they will begin consideration of the bill before the house completes it. Senator Norbeck, of South Dakota, who blocked the tax bill in the senate until given assurance that the farm measure would have a chance, said Sunday that if the house is slow with the bill, the senate probably would take it up before the house has finished it. To do this, he said, it will be necessary to eliminate certain features which concern the tariff as all tariff legislation must initiate in the house.

Its Course Uncertain.

The McNary-Haugen bill enters the legislative mill with considerable uncertainty. Introduced in the house in January, it was not until a few days ago that it won its way out of committee, as the choice over a number of others. There is much disagreement in the house as to the best method of relief legislation. There is similar disagreement in the senate.

Red Gods Beckon
To Fishing Lovers

Call of Great Outdoors,
Lure of Stream and Sea
Answered by Constitution's Tour.

BY O. J. WILLOUGHBY,
Editor Constitution's Highway Department.

The red gods are beckoning and it's time to go fishing.

That the call of the great outdoors, the lure of stream and sea are strong medicine even in these effete days, is shown conclusively by the steady calls at the highway department of The Constitution, where applications are being filed for The Constitution's auto tour to Panama City, May 17-25.

But quite a few people, while stating that they have every intention of joining the tour, have failed to sign up definitely, and unless they do so very soon they may find themselves disappointed.

Low Hotel Rates.

The Constitution, in arranging the tour, has undertaken to engage hotel reservations at the Panama City hotels and boarding houses at reduced rates. It is necessary, therefore, to forward this information to the Florida city with as little delay as possible. All who intend going are consequently urged to get in touch with The Constitution at once. Applications will be received on the first floor of The Constitution building between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock, and 5 and 7 o'clock.

Special arrangements have been made to care for any tire or mechanical trouble experienced by the tourists on the runs to Florida and back. Quick Tire Service, Inc., will be represented on the trip with all supplies and equipment necessary for giving up a flat casing in nine shakes of a lamb's tail.

Not Limited to Atlanta.

The tour is not limited to Atlanta motorists and anglers from other parts of the state will be welcomed if they desire to join en route provided they file applications before the trip starts.

An entry fee of $5 a car and $2.50 for each person is charged to defray partially the expense of arranging the tour and for purchase of banners.

POLICE AND REDS

Seven Are Slain, 500 Arrested as Result of Riot.
German Monarchists
Predict New Kaiserdom.

Halle, Germany, May 11.—While monarchist leaders addressing 70,000 fascisti here Sunday boasted that the day of the kaiser and the empire would be restored, police and "reds" battled on the outskirts of the city in clashes in which six "reds" and one policeman were killed.

Five hundred communists have been placed under arrest as the result of the day's fighting. Many policemen and communists were wounded. "Reds" and "whites" had both selected Halle as a battleground. The fascisti came to dedicate a monument to Field Marshal von Moltke, making of the occasion a monster demonstration gorgeous with monarchial flags. Prince Oskar, son of the kaiser, and General Ludendorff were both present.

Brewery Is Fight Center.

Communists planned an equally impressive show, and "red" mobs attempted to break up the fascisti ceremony.

Sharp fighting centered on a brewery which the "reds" had occupied with the intention of attacking the monarchist parade. Police stormed the building and smoked them out, and a number of those killed died in this fighting.

Heavy police forces forming a barrier between the city and the fascisti meeting place were attacked by "red" crowds. Leaders came forward to arrange for a communist parade to pass, but while a parley was under way a shot rang out from the crowd, followed a moment later by a volley.

Show Colors of Empire.

The old monarchial colors were displayed everywhere throughout the city during the day, but not a single republican flag on a red banner was to be seen.

There was an impressive ceremony at the dedication of the Von Moltke monument, Colonel Duester-

MOTHER'S DAY GIFT

IS MOST WONDERFUL.

Connerville, Ind., May 11.—"It has certainly been a wonderful Mother's day for me," said Mrs. Nancy J. Martin, mother of Major Frederick L. Martin, when informed the aviator is safe at Port Moller, Alaska. Mrs. Martin, who was overjoyed at receipt of the news, said she had given up all hope of her son ever being found alive.

"My hopes died when no word was received after he had been missing for three days," she said. Mrs. Martin, whose home is in Richmond, Ind., has been visiting a sister near here.

San Diego, Cal., May 11.—"I am the happiest woman in the world. It seems almost too good to be true after all the long dreary hours of waiting and the many disappointments I have suffered since Fred was reported lost," Mrs. Frederick L. Martin said after she received the telegram that ended nearly two weeks of sleepless nights and continual waiting for news of her flier husband.

"I am overjoyed with happiness and hardly know what to say. I tried to keep up my courage all the while, but the strain was beginning to tell. When the boys were first reported lost I felt they were there in those Fever, 103 Degrees.

Memphis, Tenn., May 11.—William A. (Billy) Sunday, 60, who for the first time in his thirty years as an evangelist, was today forced to cancel both of his sermons because of illness, had failed to respond satisfactorily to treatment tonight, and had a temperature of 103 degrees. In addition to the strain of his strenuous campaign here, Mr. Sunday lost many hours of sleep last week in worrying over the condition of his wife, who was seriously injured in an automobile accident over a week ago. Friday night the evangelist suffered an attack of food poisoning, and has been weakened thereby.

His physicians hope for his recovery.

McADOO SIDETRACKS POLITICS FOR DAY

Nashville, Tenn., May 11.—The guest of Nashville today, William G. McAdoo spent Mother's day in the state where he formerly resided, in a manner practically devoid of all political significance.

The democratic candidate for presidential nomination, arriving here from Jackson, Tenn., where he spoke on campaign subjects yesterday, attended services at the First Presbyterian church, the denomination of which his wife is a member.

Mr. McAdoo and his party were guests at a dinner at the home of Lee Douglas, campaign manager for Davidson county, and in the afternoon he paid tribute to Andrew Jackson by placing a wreath upon Jackson's tomb at the Hermitage, home of the great chief, near Nashville.

An informal talk was made at the shrine of Jackson, in response to the cordial reception extended to the presidential candidate by the Ladies' Hermitage association.

"I think I can remove this obstacle," Mr. McAdoo remarked, when the caretaker failed to arrive in time to open the gate to a five-foot iron picket fence surrounding the tomb of Jackson. He mounted the fence and in an instant was on the other side to complete the ceremonies.

A number of informal conferences were held during the evening with friends, a Georgia delegation, headed by Major J. S. Cohen and Hollins Randolph, of Atlanta, meeting him here.

Mr. McAdoo will deliver an informal address tomorrow at Cookeville, Tenn., returning in the evening for his final speech in his Tennessee campaign at Nashville, whereupon he will depart for Flint, Mich., and New York before returning to California.

barren wastes alive. I couldn't make myself believe that he would be taken from me.

Afraid But Hopeful.
"But as time went on and no word came that they had been found, I became afraid. But always there was some hope that they were safe and would come back to me."

"When the message came today I was overjoyed. I told Bobby, our little boy and he cried, too. But it was because his daddy was out of the race, for he has never known that he was lost. I didn't tell him because I just couldn't. But things are all right now. We are sorry that daddy can't go on—his plane is wrecked—but we forget that in our joy that he is safe."

To Ask Him to Retire.
In the first reflective mood that came upon her after hearing that her husband was safe, Mrs. Martin made the statement that she would make every effort henceforth to persuade her darling husband to "get out of the flying business forever."

Mrs. Martin said that no words could express the suffering that she had undergone, but there were lines in her face which did express it. "I'll write to him," she said grimly. "It will be a sacrifice for him, but he's given enough of himself to the service. Understand, please, that he belongs to me and to his son."

On Heels of Letters.
The telegram telling that the round-the-world fliers were safe at Port Moller was received by the commander's wife Sunday morning. It was an unsigned radiogram relayed to San Diego from Seattle. The message was brief and gave no details.

News of the safety of Major Martin came 48 hours after his wife received a letter from the flight commander, describing his last Alaskan mishap (the forced landing at Portage Bay).

In the letter Major Martin declared that he "held the greatest possibility of disaster," but reported that he and his mechanic came through it safely.

"We left Seward at 10:10 o'clock on the 16th," the letter read. "Flying conditions had been poor, and we were fed up on the adverse weather reports we had received. The day was fine with the sun shining and the snow-capped mountains in the distance sights of beauty."

Hole in Crank Case.
"At 2:20 I passed a note to Harvey asking him for a sandwich. He raised up from his place in the rear cockpit, something he had never done before, and looked at the instrument board. He saw we had no oil pressure."

"At that time we were on the west side of Portage Bay, flying at a 1,000-foot elevation. I came down using the engine as little as possible and landed about 200 feet from shore. We looked at the engine and found a hole in the crank case big enough to stick your finger through."

"As night came on we gave up hope of the other fliers returning, and decided they had pressed on to Chignik, 100 miles away. The night was fine with a full moon shining, but we felt there was a storm brewing."

"Harvey suggested that we could save ourselves by pulling in the anchor line and drifting as close as possible to shore. We had our luggage all packed."

Rescued by Destroyer.
"I determined to stay on the ship and as soon as I told Harvey, he said he would stick with me. We settled down in the cockpits and made ourselves as comfortable as possible. It was calm, but cold."

"I took the first watch. At 10:30 o'clock Harvey awoke and said for me to go to sleep. I slept until 2:10 o'clock and awakened stiff and cold."

I'm too long to be comfortable in a cockpit. The moon went down at 4:15. But it had served us well during the night and deserved a rest."

"At daybreak I saw a wisp of smoke on the horizon. Harvey was sleeping on the field glasses and I didn't awaken him until I was certain. The glasses showed two destroyers. I fired a pistol when they were three or four miles away. The leading destroyer, the Corder, went on, but the Hall came into the east side of the bay and anchored. We had used all our 'very' signals, and feared they had not been seen, but soon launches came away from the destroyer and we were soon aboard."

BAPTIST LAYMEN HOLD MEET TUESDAY NIGHT

Introduction of the governor will emphasize his ideal of citizenship for our commonwealth.

The second speaker is Douglas Freeman, editor of the News-Leader, one of the largest dailies of the south. Mr. Freeman is not only a well-known newspaper man, but has spoken before important gatherings throughout the state.

Mr. Freeman is a graduate of Johns Hopkins university with the degree of doctor of philosophy, and he is also a graduate of the University of Richmond. He has been honored with degrees from Washington and Lee university and William and Mary college. He has not announced the subject of his address.

Dr. Jones on Program.

Dr. M. Ashby Jones, pastor of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church, will introduce Mr. Freeman. Dr. Jones, who is an intimate friend of Mr. Freeman, Sunday school superintendent, and a business and professional man in Atlanta, accepted the invitation to Tuesday's meeting.

Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Baptist World alliance, as well as president of the Southern Baptist convention, will conduct the devotional service at the opening of the meeting. Dr. Mullins is a preacher and author of wide reputation.

Colonel F. J. Paxon, chairman of the executive committee of the Baptist council, will preside. There will be musical numbers by Mrs. James H. Whitten, soloist of the Ponce de Leon Avenue church, and by John D. Hoffman, baritone.

The Hoffman quartet also will sing. Mr. Sheldon will accompany these soloists and also will play the accompaniment for the hymns sung by the congregation.

Will Arrive Tuesday.

Mr. Freeman will arrive in Atlanta at noon Tuesday and Senator George will reach the city in the late afternoon. They will stop at the Biltmore hotel.

Every arrangement for the comfort of the audience has been provided. Special electric lighting for the voice of the speakers have been installed. No collection will be taken at this meeting.

The meeting begins promptly at 7:30 o'clock and will close by 9 o'clock.

Committees in charge of the meeting are F. S. Etheridge, Hugh M. Willet, W. H. Orr, Carlisle W. Binns, John F. Purser and M. L. Brittain.

DELEGATES ARE ARRIVING FOR BAPTIST CONVENTION.
Although the first session of the main conference of the Southern Baptist convention will not open until Wednesday morning, hundreds of delegates are expected to arrive here Tuesday for the pre-convention conferences and board meetings to be held Monday and Tuesday.

There will be a meeting of the stewardship leaders of the southern states at the First Baptist church tonight. Dr. John F. Purser, of Atlanta, is president of this conference and will preside at the session which will continue through Tuesday.

Tuesday night the women will hold the opening session of the Woman's Missionary union, auxiliary to the convention, at the Baptist tabernacle. Speakers will be Miss Kathleen Mallory of Birmingham; Mrs. W. C. James, president of the union; and Dr. W. O. Carver, professor of missions in the seminary, at Louisville.

The field workers' conference composed of secretaries of the Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. organizations of the seventeen states of the convention, will hold an annual meeting Tuesday at the First Baptist church.

Tuesday afternoon George W. Andrews, secretary of Sunday school work in Georgia, will take the members of the field workers' conference to Stone Mountain for a pleasure trip. It is stated.

Bible Conferences.
The Southern Baptist Bible conference holds its first session on Tuesday night at the Central Baptist church. The speakers will be Dr. V. L. Pickard, of Chattanooga, and Dr. Lincoln McConnell, of Oklahoma City.

This conference will hold sessions every day during the noon recess hour of the convention in the First Baptist church. Leaders of the movement say that the emphasis in the meetings will be upon doctrinal questions. Dr. Victor L. Masters, of Kentucky, and Dr. T. P. Stafford, of Kansas City, are leaders in this new organization.

Dr. Mullins to Speak.
Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the convention, will deliver the annual presidential address on Wednesday morning, after which the convention sermon will be delivered by Dr. Finley Gibson, of Kentucky.

The report of the conservation commission, the committee in charge of the $75,000,000 campaign, will be presented by Dr. L. R. Scarborough, of Texas, in the afternoon. At night the report of the education board will be read and discussed.

Thursday will be devoted to foreign missions and the seminaries, and Friday will be devoted to the Sunday school board and the home mission board. The report of the relief and annuity board and woman's work comes Saturday; Sunday will be devoted to the discussion of the future campaign and the convention will adjourn Monday.

COLORED ODD FELLOWS IN BIG CELEBRATION

Ten lodges of the colored District Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows No. 18 were represented Sunday afternoon at the seventy-ninth anniversary celebration, held at Ebenezer church. Delegations marched to the church prior to the exercises, and a program appropriate to the anniversary was presented.

Following lodge ceremonies, A. V. Williams, pastor of Ebenezer church, delivered a sermon.

WILLYS-OVERLAND CO. EMPLOYEES FORM CLUB

The Employees' club, composed of more than 80 employees of the Willys-Overland company, was organized at a banquet and dance Friday night at the Imperial hotel. Officers were elected and plans completed for future meetings and social affairs.

Roy R. Clement was named president of the new organization; Hubert L. Lee, vice-president, and Western H. Paul, secretary.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONTEST WINNERS ANNOUNCED FRIDAY

Contest winners in the recent membership drive conducted by the Epworth league of the Martha Brown Memorial Methodist church will be announced Friday night at a banquet of the league in the Wesley class room of the church.

Hoover Indorses Week.
Washington, May 11.—Secretary Hoover, who is president of "Better Homes in America" in a statement announcing the opening tonight of "Better Homes Week," declared the demonstrations of better homes to be made in a thousand American communities deserved "the thoughtful consideration of all citizens."

"Opportunity is not equal until true homes are within the reach of all," he said.

"Where overcrowding, insanitation, ugliness of house, grounds or furnishings, or needless drudgery in housework are found, self-respect and productive activity are restricted."

Roses Tell Story of Love Of All Atlanta for Mothers

SILENT, BUT IMPRESSIVE TRIBUTE PAID SUNDAY

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN.

Red roses and white roses, singly worn were the tributes of thousands of Atlantans Sunday to mothers who are either still on this earth or who have returned to the heavenly origin whence they came.

With remarkable singleness of purpose and with touching simplicity Atlantans joined the whole continent in this ceremonial of silent, but eloquent tribute. A ceremonial without ritualism, without great ostentation, but nevertheless deep in significance and sublime in spiritual value.

For the nation that honors its mothers cannot perish and the race that esteems its ancestors has the promise of a "lengthening of its days" from higher than human authority.

The ancients were wont to set aside a day on which they paid homage and reverence to the creative spirit of the universe. On that day sacrifices and burnt-offerings were made and the heavens were clouded with the smoke arising from the altars. America is more definite. It concerns itself less with the invisible force that is the chief support of all creation and perhaps creation itself, it honors directly and straightforwardly the mothers of the nation.

It was left to this country, so commonly accused of catering to base materialism, for having no spiritual inclinations and to be a nation of idol worshippers to set aside a day to honor mother, an act that eclipses all other festivals in tenderness and sweet design.

It is true that throughout the ages human beings have revered their women, to a certain extent. But there are black lapses into barbarism when women and mothers were considered of no more importance than slaves.

The Bishop of Tours declared in a full session of a church council in the year 318 that women were not human beings and we cannot find that any of his ecclesiastical colleagues objected to his declaration.

Yet it is recorded of St. Elmo that he adopted the practice of humbly stepping aside from the road whenever he met a woman. Though his feet must step in the gutter or tread amidst thorns, "I do that," he said, "to render homage to my mother, who gave her life that I might see the glories of Nature and also as an act of adoration to the mother of Jesus, whose heart was pierced by a sword."

It was but fitting then that in an age which has been called the age of women, the greatest of all women—the mothers—should be honored in a special and reverent way.

Atlanta joined with the whole country and Canada in bringing its tribute Sunday. For one day the esteem and honor in which mothers are held was visible in coat lapels and dresses.

Roses are but an outward sign. A more symbol of inner feeling. There were, to be sure, people in the United States who could not afford to buy flowers. Others there were who had been segregated from their fellow human beings, who did not carry a rose in their buttonholes.

Yet we may feel certain that they also joined their thoughts with the thoughts of a whole continent to the mothers, whose advice was spurned, whose tears flowed even on that day.

If human eyes could distinguish the psychic waves and flashes that penetrated the ether that overlapped boundaries and distances and ignored the existence of different worlds they would have witnessed Sunday such a crossing and criss-crossing, such a divine supernatural contact between mothers and their children, that they would have been convinced that whatever ceases to exist in this world, be it learning or tongues, empires or kingdoms, love never fails and mother love is immortal.

Plans for Southern Golf Tourney Announced Chickasaws To Play Here
First Part of Week With

Statistics

After a lay-off of two days Boss Niehoff and his Atlanta baseball clan will today open a series of 3 games with the league leading Memphis Chickies, piloted by Johnny Dobbs, Atlanta's new star. The Atlanta team is of his long experience while in New Orleans.

The Crackers will have to stop the winning craze now so firmly attached to Manager Moore and his players by Dobbs and his crew have won 20 games and lost 5. In that 20 games there is a winning streak that reached 12 before being stopped by "Buzzer" Bill McCallister & Co. of the new Orleans baseball team. Any team that can win 14 games in a row is to be feared.

Manager Moore will make his first appearance in the Atlanta league appearance on Spiller field this afternoon and with him and his Chick ball team will be two former Crackers, one being Monroe Mitchell, a left-handed pitcher, and the other Roy "Dizzy" Carlyle, who is almost a local boy from his early childhood. Carlyle tried out with Atlanta last season and was not successful, but he was picked up by Dobbs early this spring. Carlyle received his first recognized baseball experience while a member of the Oglethorpe team several years ago. He is a hard worker in the Sulley loop. He had a bad ankle while with the Atlanta club but now he is playing a great game of ball in the outfield for Johnny Dobbs.

Crackers In Bad Shape.

The Crackers are not in the best possible shape to receive such opponents as Memphis at this time. Bill Niehoff is on the suspended list. Manager Niehoff is suffering from lumbago, George Dumont is laid up with a badly strained pitching arm and Bill McCallister is twisting his knee in practice early last week, that says nothing of the bad stars, that Benny Karr has fallen a victim to in recent games.

The team's discomforts and worries alone are enough to wreck an ordinary ball team but Manager Beitz Niehoff and President Melchrove are taking the situation in their hands and they expect that brighter day will dawn in the near future.

Memphis has one of the best pitching staffs that has ever graced a Southern league team. It is the persons of Monroe Mitchell, Tom Rogers, Cy Warmouth, "Molly" Craft, Metz and Nelly. Mitchell's work needs no comment for it is known to local fans. Rogers will be remembered as the Tom Rogers of several years back, who made such a good record while with Mobile. He was a speed ball pitcher and from a long series of games, he has lost none of the old smoke. Warmouth tried out in the American League early this spring, but was returned to Memphis and his return was a great relief to the fans from Manager Dobbs and his Memphis followers. Craft is an experienced Southern league pitcher and has been with the Atlanta Crackers and Metz are the newcomers that adorn the Memphis roster of twirlers.

Memphis will be followed by Kid Elberfeld and his Little Rock Traveler club for a series of three games, ending Saturday afternoon after which time the Crackers hit the road to be seen in the near future.

Travelers Here This Week.

Playing Memphis and Little Rock in order is no easy task, especially in the present condition of the Crackers. One must be as hard as the other. Little Rock may not have won the large number of games that grace Memphis record but Kid Elberfeld and his Travelers are to be reckoned one of the hardest fighting bunch of baseball players possible and this year's team bears the same relation.

Little Rock will bring four former Crackers to the Atlanta Crackers for a three-day series. Those players are Turner Barber, Joe Guyon, "Doc" Smith and "Scrappy" Moore.

Johnny Dobbs and his favorite while with Atlanta and his departure was regretted by many local fans. He has been moved up in the order of his batting, from second place to a lead-off position in the Atlanta line up. In his new role Joe has made good and along with his speed he seems to be a ideal lead-off man. Turner Barber was also a favorite and a baseball player from the Atlanta line officially lead the Southern league batters last season but was not in enough games to be recognized as a league leader. Joe Guyon's season was short but his work at Little Rock has been highly satisfactory. "Scrappy" Moore will always be remembered by Atlanta fans and that is a character name. "Scrappy" that he is known by as a ball player.

The baseball men for the Atlanta Crackers are in the middle of the affair and all of the games should be well worth while.

The boxing bouts are for the school championships in the various classes and weights. Elimination bouts were held last Friday afternoon and the competition is narrowed down to only two contestants in each of the classes, with the exception of the feather weight in which there are four contestants.

There will be no admission charged and the public is cordially invited to witness the boxing and other amusements.

The Georgia Tech boxing club have been in preparation for the next two years and the bouts tonight are well worth the while.

Two extra good bouts will take place between the middleweight class between Ferguson and Wilcox and the other is between Gilkerson and Sweatt in the welterweight class.

In the afternoon the regimental parade will take place on Grant field and the champion drill company of the regiment will be decided by competitive drilling. The parade and drill will conclude at 3.30 and will be followed by the smoking.

The schedule for the boxing card is as follows:

Bantamweight, Cox vs. Gray.
Welterweight, Gilkerson vs. Sweatt.
Middleweight, Fortson vs. Rogers.
Lightweight, Haston vs. Rogers.
Light heavyweight, Irwin vs. Dismond.

Featherweight, Forrest vs. L'Huissier, and Dubose vs. McBrayer.

The Indian baseball team of federal prison hung up their seventh consecutive win on the prison grounds yesterday afternoon, when they successfully defeated the K. of P. nine in a hard-fought, well-played game. The final count was G-5.

The game was interesting from beginning to finish. Smallwood went to the hill and pitched good ball up until the fourth, when he was relieved by Tanager, who was taken out a few innings later and Moore finished the game. Brunt began for the losers, but was relieved by Barnes.

The Indians scored seven runs in the first, two in the fourth and one in the fifth. The K. P. nine scored their markers in the fourth and fifth.

The base-running of Smallwood, Johnson and Pinker was a feature. The prison nine obtained seven safe singles off the deliveries of Brunt and Barnes, while the K. of P. registered safe singles off the slunkings of Smallwood, Tanner and Moore.

One Year To Live

BY JOHN HUNTER

CHAPTER XXVI.

Alone, Elise reflected on Brunel and on her, and on the reflection felt some regret and uneasiness. She was not built for this game, and though on occasion she felt its lure, yet she was not a gambler, and she must always be sorry and half afraid.

Both of them, she knew, were entirely unscrupulous, where women were concerned. Brunel was too kind to her, and had helped her so much, that her natural gratitude to him overcame part of her distrust of him.

She prepared for supper, and in a little while joined Brunel.

"What a lovely dress," she asked, as they settled back in the lighted interior of the car.

"The Cafe Grotesque," smiled Brunel.

Elise knew the Cafe Grotesque. It was at once the most famous and most notorious of all the Paris night restaurants. It was built just behind the Boulevard de Clichy, and the flare of its exterior lighting could be seen from the Boulevard far away. Greatly patronized by English and American visitors to Paris, it was not truly French, but a very sensitive and a very good aspect of France which is presented so unfailingly to foreigners.

Elise selected a little at Brunel selecting it for supper, when he could have taken her to the Cafe de Paris, Pailhards, or the Cafe de la Paix, and she felt a little sorry that she understood and became afraid.

Brunel had booked a private room, and she saw that the room was a disorder beside the main restaurant, and conducted into a room at the back, a little room, furnished heavily, with a large table, a clock, a carpet, a pendant from the ceiling, was not slight, but on the oval table in the middle of the floor glared two little table lamps, and she dimmed to orange by silken shades.

The old Elise would have retreated at sight of this room, but the new Elise, the Elise of the future, the Elise who had been told of the impending death, faced it in knowledge. She betrayed no agitation, no fear, no surprise, but went in and seated herself in the chair the obsequious waiter drew forward for her. This, she knew, was the first skirmish in the battle which now was rapidly joining. She knew she must last until her fate claimed her.

The supper was delicious, chosen by Brunel from vast experience. The wines were right, the coffee was delicious, and the liqueurs in accord with the rest.

Elise drank sparingly, refusing liqueurs, while Brunel had his glass continually filled. It was figured at last. Brunel's appetite was slight, and the waiter had definitely withdrawn. Elise was conscious of a growing tension in the atmosphere, a tension in the air, the dim light, the quietness, the low conversation.

Brunel indicated the wall at the far end. "This house is very old," he said, "and the dim light, the quietness, the great Le Brun, the master of them all."

Elise was interested, for the name of Le Brun excited her imagination. When Brunel turned to look at the picture, she assented readily. She stood up, and he came round to her side of the table, putting her hand on his arm. She gazed at the picture, and clutching her shoulders.

"Elise!" he said quietly. "Elise!" She stood still, looking into his steady eyes. He said again, "Elise, Elise, Elise," and she knew she had come to the first ordeal.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The little room was silent for a space, and it seemed to Elise that Brunel's slightly quickened breathing and the beating of her own heart were the only sounds in the room.

"My dear," repeated Brunel.

So it was to be lovelinking in the old fashioned sense of the term! Brunel wanted to get a million contracts no arrangements, but would whisper of love to her, she to play her part as readily as he played his, and to make the gods go home.

Elise could have laughed bitterly as she realized it. This must be Brunel's way—always. He was, she felt, actually intoxicated, yet with sufficient liquor inside him to color all life vividly, so that he was surcharged with emotion and ready to claim any and every emotion.

And she herself. She tried to analyze her own feelings and did not altogether succeed.

Brunel was afraid. She registered that rather astounding fact with little stirring as she faced Brunel. She was not afraid.

Brunel's face was close to hers. His fingers dug tightly into the softness of her shoulders. She knew she must answer him, must open the contest from the first.

Weeks previous she would have struggled and implored, have got away from him somehow.

Instead, she smiled.

Her hand reached up and patted his cheek. "It is the picture we would see, cherie," she said. "Take me and show it to the world."

He stared at her, his whirling wine-spurred brain hardly able to comprehend. Then he nodded.

"The picture of your own face!" He could not find any words to say to her.

She turned to the picture and his hand dropped from her shoulders while she stared up at it.

"It is good," she said at last, definitely; and turned back towards the picture, to look at pictures in pictures.

He tried to bar her path to the table, but she playfully warned him aside.

"I must sit down," she said. "Now you go back to your chair like a good man and talk to me." She slipped past him and dropped into her chair.

He rested himself and stared across the table at her.

Obviously he was muddled. He had looked toward to delicious half hearted impudently, and catching. Instead, he was finding a very cool, poised woman, who met his advances with a light indifference.

"I have finished your coffee if you would be better for us to go," she said. "La Phelene cannot afford late night. "They have a way of dimming one's beauty."

Brunels' breath came in long gusts. He sat up, and the but-forearms rested on the cloth, brushing aside the various table furnishings which were in their way.

"I am not deaf," said this voice was a little thick. "When you came to me and said you would dance, I said that between me and the people whom I should have to entertain, I must understand. You remember?"

The brutal directness of it curled her lips. This man had abandoned all the softness which came from sheer bargaining.

"I remember little," she said, "except that I am La Phalene, and La Phalene is a Phalene."

He looked angry.

"La Phalene may be true, but she is not I. But I made La Phalene," he said. "I am the one who understand that, my girl? I made you—and I can break you as easily as I made you. Just that. Remember it always."

She was so infuriated, getting perilously near to quarreling. She wished to win and remain friends with the enemy, for so a complete victory would be.

"Oh, la! la! la!" she laughed. "Why become so heated over so small a matter? My friend, my grand friend, to be anything but your friend. It is you who would quarrel and desolate me."

He whole attitude was an enigma. He felt himself in deeper waters than he knew.

"Remember little! Elise—I love you!" He was veering round—swinging from anger to love, under the spell of her words.

"Then pity me." She might have said that sincerely, brokenly, but that she managed to fill her voice with haunter and her eyes with laughter.

"I am not a Phalene," she said.

You must know that dancing is a tiring business for those who are not

He knew his chance was going. He started to retrieve the situation, stretching his hand across the table and seizing her wrist. "That is very well." He was a little slow in retrieving his words quickly and clipped. "That is very well. But—one may be always tired. I have a motto—I! It is just 'the moment is the time.' I believe not in evasions and excuses."

She withdrew her wrist from his grip and interrupted him and once more patted him on the cheek. "How lovely you are, like!"

I think procrastination is delightful. I love to put things off and off, and then—perhaps never do them." Once more she mocked him. "And not let me tell you how much I am enjoying this and entertaining, but I am sure you must be as tired as I am."

She stood up. He barred her path as she started to rise, considerably raising the table, and his eyes no longer glared, but were mild.

"Elise—this is not the end?"

She looked up at him. The end? I should like to know, please?"

He ever such good friends, and I hope we shall remain such."

His eyes lighted, like some wretched dog's to which a bone has been carelessly tossed.

She would have passed him, but that still he stopped her advance.

"Elise!" His voice was once more hoarse, and his eyes were just one kiss in earnest—

She looked up at him, appraising him with one swift glance which told her how far she dared go.

That was all. She turned. She saw that. In order to win everything she must concede a little. And yet—to

She gave her lips to him. She could not. She kissed his forehead.

The finger reached and touched the top of her forehead, where her luxuriant hair parted in the middle. "Sweet little girl, how you are like a kitten—like a daddy would give for good night!"

She stopped the thread of his protection. That is the decree, monsieur."

He was willing now to allow his cheek to be kissed, to take what crumbs she offered him and appear contented. He leaned over her and kissed her on the forehead. Beneath his face, she felt a burning, but her face was white and wet. But she was smiling when he straightened himself.

"And now take me home. Do you not know I am weary of this fatigue, and you have kept me here standing while you argued about a little kiss. Come and sit down."

Brunel's temper was wholly restored. She was, he decided, a misling. Brunel still counted the victory his. "You know, my dear," he said, "Brunel said: 'You have surprised me to-night, cherie. I always called you the Little Puritan. Now I shall have to change my mind.' You are hardly imagined you capable of it."

She laughed quietly.

She said to a standstill before her doorway.

"Good night, cherie," said Brunel. "We shall meet tomorrow."

"We shall meet tomorrow," she assured him, and went down.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

She had mocked Brunel—and now she felt late. She was taking a morning bath, and her father rang in Elise's ears as she walked up the stairs to her apartment after leaving Brunel in his car. She was tired, and she was suddenly weighed down by a great weariness.

She opened the door and went in, disheveled, going straight to her bedroom. She had not even time to change, and she followed her, but she dismissed the girl Lucie.

She was alone. She was no longer La Phalese, whom Brunel and all those others desired, but just little Elise of the Rue Jacques, very tired, very lonely, and very sad. The edge of life with widening eyes looked ahead, afraid, wishing only retirement and quiet.

She had to endure for months. For months she had to play this game, to keep these men at bay. It would be a long, long eternity. She would welcome the relief of the end of the game. Doctor Lapiere's sentence would bring.

"She would welcome it!"

She paused to consider this incredible fact. She would welcome death.

SIDNEY

The world was at her feet, but she looked over it, past it, to that death which awaited her at the end of the so short road which seemed so long to her sight.

There was a way in which the road might be really short; a way in which she could find some specious sort of happiness in traveling it. She would have to give up all the things she fought against, and they were not unhappy. After all—what mattered it? She was to die. There was no more time to waste in recoil. She was to die. Within a year. So what mattered it?

She might find a false joy in living, if only she could get it.

It would be easy—and it meant far more money for Marthe—far more. Then she would be free. A giant hand clutched them, stilling them, silencing them, crushing them.

Money! More money for Marthe!

To sell herself—to sell herself—the threshold of that door through which she must pass to face the future. To sell herself to the use of which there must cost the great accumulation. To walk before Him who watches all, and say, "I will do this short life—why, I do know. But because it was short, I misused it. Had it been longer, I should have preserved it carefully. My sin was no reason in it." It cowardice.

To sell herself to—Brunel! He knew how he could make Marthe live on the money earned As La Phalese she would earn sufficient and to spare for the guarantee of her children's future.

Her thoughts turned to Kenderpeevishly, fretfully. Why had he away and left her?

Quickly that mood passed. He had neither deserted her nor purposely raised her hopes. That had been all her own doing. He had probably forgotten her by this time.

Again her thoughts stopped dead. There seemed nothing else—noting at all.

She had not one friend to whom she could turn. La Phaleuc, of the Theatre Joyeuse, La Phaleuc, whom Paris was coming to worship, had nobody to turn to. He was a man of great wealth and fame, and lost friendship and hope, and she found the exchange against her.

She reached out her hand and switched off the lights. Through the window, across the roofs, the faint purple of the dawn was lifting.

Fully dressed as she was, she was evenning dress, showing tawny now, despite its costliness, in the radiance of the awakening day, she went sideways on to the pillow and tried to sleep.

Elise did not sleep well. But her thoughts took a different turn. She no longer thought of her friends.

Brunel, Mordac, all of their kind, were jackals. Those men always won, and she was the only one who never played the game properly.

There was an astounding thought, and it brought Elise to a sitting position, very early in the morning.

She had a partner of whose existence none of the other players was aware—death! Death was stacking the cards for her, the other players did not know it!

She had but to fight for a little while, and then would come a great rest. She would still live, but with the spoil of the battle in her pos-

She made her decision. She would do it.

Over the morning coffee she outlined roughly her plans, and the first thing she concentrated on was the suite of rooms Brunel had obtained for her behind the Clamps Elyse. She pictured herself as another Jane, holding receipts of the greatest value, with herself as a queen, and she would be furnished according to them. And be a male-attendant. There would be a maid, two or three. A Nubian or an Ethiopian, in garish dress as a doorkeeper. That would go well with the rest. A moorish girl as a chambermaid.

She decided on him without further thought.

CHAPTER 37.

Satirizing Revelations.

Suzanne looked up at Curtis Lealand eagerly. She could not but be interested in him, since he was an old friend of her husband's. But there was added cause for interest. What was it that he wanted to tell her?

"I'd love to talk with you," she told him, rising. "If we could find a place where there wouldn't be so many people around us."

"I'll go over to the corner," he suggested. "Everyone will be dancing in another moment or

"Don't feel that way," Suzanne urged, in her own heart she knew that the girl was right, in her estimate of Geoff's opinion. "If you care for Dick, nothing else matters. And as you care so he's certain and you two can go off together."

"But we've got to have money to go on: I can go back on the stage, of course, but I don't want to do anything; he was going to be a lawyer, and he'd have to study ages before he could earn anything that way."

"Well, Geoff will turn some of his money over to him, I think," Suzanne answered consolingly. "That's worst. I'm sure it will come up

But just then Mrs. Haynes came hurrying up to Suzanne.

"My dear, I want you to meet one of my Grangers, she's a leader in the community work in Lowell. Her support is going to mean a lot for Geoff."

Suzanne glanced up at Leland regarding and he raised his eyebrows and smiled.

"We'll continue our talk later," he promised her, in a low voice, as Mrs. Haynes turned away. But that the social leader had seen everything.

"Is Curtis Leland trying to flirt with you?" she demanded. "He's far too attractive to be uninterested. Women are all over him."

"Yes, but there's my mother, too I ought to tell you, I think," she doesn't like you, I know, and she loves with your husband, I always, and she thinks that she can win him over now. She will stop at nothing."

Suzanne had never what to say. She was glad when Lolita changed the subject, and a moment later left the room. Everyone knew, it seemed to her, that she had wanted to get away from her mother.

"But he loves me," she reminded herself, as she finished dressing. "And she can't do anything when love's on my side."

BUY COAL EARLY IS HOOVER'S PLEA

Washington, May 11.—Secretary Hoover today appealed to the nation's coal consumers to prevent a coal shortage by laying in coal supplies during the summer.

He urged industries to purchase their stocks during the slack season to prevent congestion on the railroads during the fall, which, he said, would tend to increase the coal prices and create a shortage.

The appeal was made in a letter to the secretary of the National and State Trade Association in the United States.

Negro Goes on Trial For Crime Committed Over 43 Years Ago

Quitman, May 11.—(Special.)—Green Foster, aged negro who recently was arrested and brought here for a murder committed 43 years ago, will be placed on trial in the superior court here Monday, with a number of eyewitnesses ready to testify against him. He declared the charge resulted from a case of mistaken identity.

"The First Year."

(At the Lyric.)

John Golden's internationally popular comedy-tragedy of young married life, "The First Year," is to be presented at the Lyric theater tonight for the first time in stock. Isabelle Lowe is Grace Livingston, and Wilfred Lytel is Tommy Tucker, the adorable newlyweds. "Ladies' bargain night" tonight is to open the week with a record-breaking attendance. "The First Year" will be presented each night and at matinee Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. It is saturated with human interest and wholesome comedy in every line and incident.

John Barrymore.

(At Loew's Grand.)

America's first chance to see John Barrymore in "Beau Brummel" at popular prices is this afternoon, when the notable screen classic is exhibited here for the first time at Loew's Grand theater, with a vaudeville bill including the famous Jan Rubini, concert violinist, composer and conductor; Jack Laits' musical farce, "The Honeybees"; Frank "Peggy" Jones and the Morton Brothers' novelty comedy acts. The entire program will continue at three full performances daily throughout the week.

Paramount Theater.

(For Colored Only.)

When A. S. M. Hutchins wrote "If Winter Comes" he contributed to the world of fiction the literary sensation of a decade. William Fox has produced the screen counterpart of this now famous novel which bids fair to become the most talked of photograph of the season. It will be given its first public showing at the Paramount theater, commencing today.

Athens Boys and Girls Plan To Attend Camp Of Y. M. C. A. on Chattooga River This Summer

Boys of Athens "Y" camp on creek near Chattooga river engaged in tug-o-war struggle. The losers get a bath by being pulled into the creek. W. T. Forbes, seen in the upper left side, has directed the camps for many years.

Athens, Ga., May 10.—(Special.)—Preparations for the Athens Y. M. C. A. summer camps have been completed and the dates set, it was announced today by Walter T. Forbes, secretary of the "Y," under whose direction the camps have been held for a number of years. The boys' camps will open June 17 and will last to July 28, while the girls' camp will open July 30 and last until August 28.

Directors announced that Mr. Forbes had conducted camps for the past 24 years and that they had all been successful. It is said that facilities have been greatly improved in recent years with the expenditure of about $20,000 on camp grounds, equipment and improvements, and that conveniences this season are better than ever before.

Boys' Camp Site.

Three hundred and twenty-three acres of mountain and valley land were purchased two years ago near Tallulah Falls by the Young Men's Christian association of Athens. The valley is about 300 feet higher than Tallulah Falls, and is on the mountain side, with Tallulah lake one-half mile below, and the Mathis dam, at Lake Rabun, one and a quarter miles over the ridge and down the other side of the mountain. The railroad is one mile away, and a mountain road leads from state highway No. 15 up the mountain and into the camp.

Lake Edwards, a six-acre lake, was made in the lower end of the valley by the erection of a strong and well-built rock pen, cribbed, apron dam, and 22 permanent buildings have already been erected. The dining hall is located on the brow of the hill, just below the living cabins. It will seat 144 boys. There are 15 cabins with ample ventilation.

Construct Big Lodge.

A lodge, 46x80 feet, has been constructed on the lake shore, with assembly room for social and religious gatherings, indoor gymnasium and volleyball court. A large diving tower, 10x28 feet, 15 feet deep, with four platforms at different levels, furnishes perfect facilities for good swimmers and divers.

A pool, 40 x 110 feet, in front of the lodge, with the shore line as one boundary, canoe landings at either end, and the lake side completely roped in, furnishes a place for beginners in depths of from two and one-half to four feet. This reduces the danger to a minimum, and with the efficient and constant supervision during the two daily swimming periods, gives ideal supervision and instruction to those learning to swim.

Boating Facilities.

There are 16 canoes and two motor boats in the camp equipment. One motor boat is on the camp lake, and a steel motor boat is on Tallulah Lake, and is used to go to and from Tallulah Falls for mail and supplies, and for pleasure trips.

A boathouse on Lake Rabun near the dam, with a large living room upstairs, is planned with several wains and a fast motor boat. The lake has 27 miles of shore line.

Two tennis courts have been built on the side of one of the mountains, and there is room for more. There is an athletic field for baseball and track, and an out-door basketball court. With an expenditure of about $10,000 on this field it will be ideal, and in a setting that makes a beautiful picture, officials say.

Water is supplied by gravity, and running water is piped to different points of the camp ground. At the kitchen and dining hall hot and cold water is supplied.

Low Fees Charged.

Last summer was the second season on this new camping place. A total of 91 boys and 83 girls, in addition to scores of visitors, were in camp there.

The boys' camp was run for six weeks. Athens boys paid a camp fee of $5.00, which went to the Boys' camp committee as a fund to care for the property during the year. Athens boys paid $10 a week for camp expenses.

The "Y" has built on large lines, so that boys and girls from towns, cities and rural districts of northwestern Georgia can also go on this camp.

Non-Athens boys paid a camp fee of $10 and weekly expenses of $12.50. Girls pay the same rate of camp fee, but $2.50 a week more than the boys for weekly camp expenses.

Bible Classes Held.

Bible classes are held in the morning before the day's activities open up, and at vesper service in the evening at the camp life problems are also discussed. Time is given to them. Mr. Forbes, who is leader, maintains that there is ample time before the day's program to give study and consideration of the great questions in a boy's life; and that these periods are more important and will produce happiness.

It is the happy fact of all matters how ignorant or skeptical they may be about this religious part of the camp life at the start, invariably before the end of the camp the Bible classes are the best and biggest part of the "Y" camp's program," he said.

HENRY A. RUCKER DIES AT RESIDENCE SUNDAY

Henry A. Rucker, colored, of 132 Piedmont avenue, for thirteen years collector of internal revenue for Georgia under three republican administrations, died at his residence Sunday afternoon.

Born at Washington, Ga., on November 7, 1852, he had been a leader of his race and for more than forty years was a prominent factor in Georgia republican politics. In 1897 he was appointed collector of internal revenue, with offices in Atlanta, by President McKinley, and served until the administration of McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft, retiring to private life in 1910.

He always took an active part in bringing about friendly and cordial relations between the races in Atlanta and throughout the state, and aided in every way in his power in the advancement and development of Atlanta.

In 1889 he was married to Annie Long, the daughter of the first colored congressman from Georgia. He leaves his widow and eight children, all of whom reside in Atlanta except Henry, Jr., his oldest son, of New York city, and his oldest daughter.

Born in slavery times he was owned at the time the civil war started by Dr. William King, of Athens, the father-in-law of the late Henry W. Grady, and even after he was freed and became a free man, he always showed the greatest deference and consideration to Dr. King and all members of his family. At all times he held the confidence and friendship of the best people of Atlanta.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

NEGRO PASTOR PAYS TRIBUTE TO MOTHERS

Dr. Russell Brown, pastor of the First Congregational church, delivered a Mother's day sermon Sunday, enjoining the young mothers of his church to teach their children reverence for parents.

He said, "I don't want an education if it means ridiculing the mother and who have washed and ironed and toiled to give us our religion. I rather be a heathen in Africa and run half clad in the forests with the animals if the knowledge I gained away from the respect which I have in my soul for her who rocked my cradle while I was helpless."

WALKER SPEAKER AT B. Y. P. U. MEET HERE ON SUNDAY

Governor Clifford Walker Sunday morning addressed a large meeting of the B. Y. P. U. district convention at the Baptist church at Stone Mountain. Several hundred district members were present.

Progress of the junior organization of the Baptist church in the Fifth district was outlined at the meeting, and plans for enlargement of the organization were formed. Governor Walker indorsed aims of the union, and congratulated district heads on the success of the convention.

Huntsville Man Dies.

Huntsville, Ala., May 11.—(Special.)—R. B. McCary, a traveling man known throughout the south, dropped dead Saturday in the lobby of a hotel at Huntington, W. Va., according to a message received by members of his family at Huntsville. Mr. McCary was 65 years old, and is survived by his widow and several sons and daughters.
